Revealing Fate analyzes this chart in a systematic and analytical way—taking into account the relationships between and among certain aspects. For men the Four Pillars are read with the Yang cycle; for women they're read with the Yin cycle. This dynamic is similar to how one may read a direction as clockwise and counterclockwise or forward and reverse.

Your personal Celestial Element Sign is categorized within the day pillar (marked in red text) and the following digressions are based on the interaction among all Celestial Branches, Earthly Stems, Zodiac signs, Five Phases, and Ten Gods within your Four Pillars of Destiny. For information regarding these terminologies please visit www.revealingfate.com.

Significance of Your Celestial Element Sign

You are born with the Yin Water sign (Day Master)—the equivalent of the gentle stream or misty rain. Yin Water does not does not have the breadth, depth, and vigor of Yang Water in rivers, lakes, and seas, however what it lacks in strength and audacity it makes up for in consistency, persistency, and ever-flowing virtue. You are smart, nurturing, and cool at your best; cold, indifferent, and callous when at your worst.

Significance of the Year Pillar

The Year Pillar represents the dynamics of your early life—typically from age 1 – 20 years

It also represents the relationships with your parents, elders (such as uncles and aunts), grandparents, and in some cases legal guardians.

Water bears the Wood element; Yang Wood sits atop Yin Water (Pig Zodiac). This means that since childhood you have always had a knack for either art or literature as a pastime and outlet for your creativity. Even today you still find making art enjoyable and incredibly fulfilling. Between your parents, one places expectations on you while the other has a closer relationship with you but does not always provide you with the emotional support that you desire.

Significance of the Month Pillar

The Month Pillar represents the dynamics of your period of life from age 21 – 40 years

It also represents the relationships with your siblings, peers, colleagues, and friends. These are the most influential people in your life during your personal development stage.

Your Month Pillar contains Yang Water sitting atop Yang Metal (Monkey Zodiac). You often seem to attract friendly competition in the workforce and surrounding your love life (in fact, there is a good chance this has happened simultaneously). The Yang Metal energy represents your mother, and within this Earthly Branch contains hidden branches of Yang Water and Yang Earth. This means that there are yet unrevealed competitors for your significant other (perhaps husband) that may either unintentionally or otherwise attract his attention. However, even in the presence of this scenario you should be at ease; his attraction to you is greater than to others.

In your family you have two sisters and two brothers—most likely all younger than you, or at least the relationship feels this way. You are likely very close with one of them in particular, or share much in common with this sibling.

Significance of the Day Pillar

The Day Pillar represents the dynamics of your period of life from age 41 – 60 years

It also represents relationships with the self, significant other(s), and with close friends as they truly understand and accept the real, core 'you.'

Yin Water sits atop a Yin Fire branch (Snake Zodiac). This Fire says something about your father: it is likely that he suffers or had suffered chronic illness and approaches his final moments here. Within this same Earthly Branch contains the Yang Metal branch which represents your mother: she nurtures you tremendously and continues to provide everything she possibly can for you. She is a truly wonderful mother that offers great experiential wisdom and a strong sense of commitment to your wellbeing. An excess of Water in the Day Pillar too easily snuffs out passion, liveliness, excitement, and emotions felt in your career. You may easily find your job and tasks to be mundane and too routine or lacking of substance for your liking.

Your ideal partner(s) or spouse(s) is someone capable of boosting your morale by relentlessly cheering you on and supporting your endeavors. They are courageous and insightful, complimenting your restless and almost fidgety nature. You are a complex person who involves themselves in many affairs, who requires their significant other to understand your soft appearance on the outside and firm strength on the interior; this person must see your truest self and validate their commitment to you.

Significance of the Hour Pillar

The Hour Pillar represents the dynamics of your late life from age 61 years – when you've completed this life

The Hour Pillar also represents the relationships with your offspring, younger adults, and your grand-children.

The Yin Water Stem sits atop a Yin Earth Branch (Ox Zodiac). This Water again represents your sister (or rival from elsewhere) while the Earthly Branch is located within the Season of Treasure – Trap, signifying a few things: the Yin Earth refers to the restrictions and pressures you experience, the Yin Water to your sister once again, and Yin Metal to large-sum short-term financial gains (either from market investments or real estate). It is likely that towards the end of your life you remain close to your sister or rekindle your relationship, experience distinct limitations or shortcomings, and acquire abundant financial support for a secure retirement which likely will come unexpectedly.

Additional Analyses

Five Phases Analysis:

The net transformative tendencies of your elements yield a surplus. This manifests as a lifelong tendency towards overconfidence, immobility, or self-legitimated assuredness—in all tasks and projects. You tend to receive more energy than you give in this life. You should strive towards equilibrium via the simultaneous embellishment and avoidance of certain elements. Your Four Pillars are fond of Earth and Wood, respectively; and they dread Water and Metal, respectively.

Conclusion and Suggestions

Four of your siblings relate to you more than the others, or this may signify that you only have four siblings in total. Regardless, two are brothers and the other two are sisters. You may all be quite closely related in age. You are also notably competitive with some. This is indicated by the presence of Water among your Four Pillars.

An overabundance of Yang Water acts as a competing force or gain from someone or something that does not properly satisfy your needs or desires—in your work, love, or personal life. An example of this may include receiving gifts from friends and family that are not exactly useful to you or superfluous and thus wasteful or misdirected, or being offered emotional support in a way uncondusive to comfort or progress—but is received regardless. You regard these gestures as thoughtful, despite failing to satisfy your truest desires of the heart. This type of relationship is indicated by the instance of Benevolent Plunder of the Ten Gods within your Month Pillar.

You are noticeably and irrevocably beautiful. Your facial features are soft, elegant, and both prized and envied by many. This is indicated by your net transformative tendencies of the Five Phases and affinity for the Water element.

1. Will I do better to separate from/co-parent with, or, live with/commit to my daughter's father?

Since you are a beautiful person to lay eyes upon, in the traditional description of the Four Pillars of Destiny it is indicated that such a happenstance may at times provide for less than ideal situations since beauty attracts attention—part of which is unwanted or unwarranted. Nevertheless, you are in a predicament at this time in your life. We have several observations and suggestions:

First, the recent troubles that have unfolded with your husband stem from issues related to extramarital affairs fueled by unfulfilled desire.

Second, it is clear that you love your child very much however you currently stand on very shaky ground with your husband.

Third, you are an individual brimming with life and longing for adventure, new experiences, and the “next great thing.” You feel you are torn from being your truest self and fulfilling your physical, emotional, and spiritual desires with a sense of commitment to being a good parent.

Fourth, the tumultuous qualities of your relationship with your husband are the result of a lack of mutual benefit from the elemental interactions between you two; you are able to benefit from his profile of Net Transformative Tendencies greatly but he does not share this relationship from you.

So, it is recommended that you ask yourself the following questions: Who was it that committed the affair? How much do you love your husband? Are you able to refrain from being attracted to so many different things and to what degree?

If you are able to answer these honestly with yourself, we present you with the following choices:

Option One: Separate from your husband but make a valid attempt at preserving what positive traits the relationship still has by co-parenting with your daughter until she reaches an age where she can understand the breadth of this complicated issue.

Option Two: Leave your daughter in the hands of her father and move somewhere else—preferably the American Northwest, perhaps Seattle or Portland. A fresh start is crucial if this is what you choose.

Option Three: Stay with your husband, however you must reduce the nightly outings and social events now that the relationship has seeded distrust. Instead you can immerse yourself in the arts like you used to, like painting, drawing, or writing. Even gardening is great for you to explore new venues.

In general, this year is going to be quite rough. Stay strong and resolved in your heart. You will get through this with determination, reflection, and consideration.
